

WHY WE SAY... HANG CHILD KILLERS!

LAST MONTH SHOWED WHY the British National Party supports capital punishment for child murderers. Evil perverts Timothy Morss and Brett Tyler committed sex crimes against little children for years before kidnapping, raping and murdering little Daniel Handley.

During the 1980s they had served prison sentences together in Wormwood Scrubs where they underwent 'therapy.' During these 'therapy' sessions, they discussed their sexual fantasies. Morss described in detail how he wanted to kidnap a boy between eight and thirteen with blond hair and blue eyes, bugger him, strangle him and then dispose of the body.

Morss was serving seven years, reduced to five on appeal, for bugging two nine-year-old twins and an eleven-year-old boy; Tyler was serving four years for attempted buggery and gross indecency. They became prison lovers and were no doubt issued especially strengthened condoms by the prison service.

Both men had been sexually abused as children and, as a result, went on to gain the convictions for sex offences involving young boys. Upon release, they took jobs with the same mini-cab firm and explored the sexual fantasies they had discussed in prison.

They were only caught when similarities were noticed by a retired prison officer, Edward Cook and a consultant psychiatrist, Dr. 'B' -- who both worked with paedophiles -- between the case as it was reported in the papers and the sick fantasies described in Wormwood Scrubs by homosexual pervert and child molester, Morss.

During the trial, the Old Bailey court had to be adjourned to give two women and a man time to recover their composure. The jurors wept as they watched a video on which Brett Tyler described in graphic detail how he and Morss, his homosexual lover, spotted Daniel riding his bicycle in Beckton, East London and abducted the nine-year-old, taking him back to their flat and raping him before murdering him in a lonely layby.

Referring to the case before the jurors, prosecutor, John Bevan said "If that sounds like acts of callous inhumanity and depravation beyond belief, unfortunately that is what this case is about... the deliberate abduction, abuse and murder of an innocent nine-year-old, purely for the purpose of fulfilling their lust."

Daniel was a cheerful nine-year-old often seen in the area on his bike. After the murder, 250 police searched the area including frogmen who dived into docks and a lake. It was to be six months before Daniel's body was found after it had been unearthed by foxes.

The pair had driven to East London specifically to look for a victim and came across Daniel. After luring him into their car, they drove to their flat and took turns in bugging him while the other filmed it on camcorder. Following the rape, they promised that they would take him home. Instead, they drove to Bristol and pulled into a layby off the M4 motorway. After Daniel asked "Are you going to kill me?" and got the reply that they were not, Morss and Tyler strangled him with a noose before digging a grave and burying him. After the murder, both men fled to the Philippines where they casually engaged in child sex as they wanted it.

The shock and outrage that the case has generated has showed that the nation still has some healthy instincts left. The people clearly want tough action on this issue. To his credit, Mr. Justice Curtis did as much as he could under the current system. He sentenced them both to three concurrent life sentences for false imprisonment, buggery and murder and he said that life must mean life. He further ordered that the evidence in the case should be preserved as a reminder to people of the depravity of the evil killers. No doubt he also had half an eye on the dogooders that will emerge who will try to get them released. A third man, David Guttridge who also became Morss's lover in Wormwood Scrubs got two and a half years for perverting the course of justice by helping Morss flee the country.

The case has led to well-publicised calls from professionals for a national register of convicted paedophiles to monitor their whereabouts. What it should have done, was have led to calls

HANG CHILD MURDERERS!

The vast majority of people agree that the death penalty should be reintroduced for child killers. Yet neither Conservatives, Labour nor Liberal Democrats are prepared to back such a measure into law. Parliament is supposed to represent the people. But the dogooders who sit in Government are more concerned with the rights of murderers than with the safety of our children. Sick child killers are kept in prison, often in relative luxury and at vast expense, until such time as they are released to kill again. Others such as Ian Brady and Myra Hindley are a constant reminder to the tragic parents of their victims. All those like Brady and Hindley, gave up the right to live the moment they took a young life. With more and more of these cases occurring it is time for the death penalty to be reintroduced. A country which allows the killers of its children to live is morally bankrupt. Only the British National Party is committed to the reintroduction of the death penalty for child killers.

British Nationalist says ...

No.168 JUNE 1996

Editor: John Morse

MAJOR'S TANTRUM

A lot of people, including some 'Euro-Sceptic' Tory MPs and sections of the Tory press, are praising John Major over his latest stance towards Europe in reaction to the beef crisis.

Following the EU's refusal to lift the ban on British beef exports, Major has announced that Britain intends henceforth to cause all possible havoc in European councils, using its power of veto to block all key decisions, irrespective of their merits, until his European colleagues back down.

Some papers greeted this news with headlines like 'Major goes to war at last' and 'Major stands up for Britain'. An atmosphere was created reminiscent of the nation's declaration of war on Germany in 1939, with Major cast in the role of Chamberlain (though he would no doubt prefer to be compared with Churchill).

British Nationalist yields to no-one in its detestation of the European Union and its contempt for the British politicians who have demonstrated constant subservience to it. Nevertheless, the Prime Minister's latest gesture does not impress us.

All this ranting and threats against Europe is the behaviour, not of a statesman, but of a petulant schoolboy. It not only demeans Major (which will cause us no sorrow) but it demeans Britain, bringing us down to the level of the delinquent among European nations.

Will Major's threats get us any concessions? Perhaps one or two small ones, like the removal of bans against exports of minor items with beef components, such as tallow and gelatine. These may save the Prime Minister's face but a capitulation by the EU on beef itself is, in the foreseeable future, extremely unlikely.

Of course, Major himself recognised this when he said the Europeans merely had to agree to 'a framework' for the lifting of the ban. The real object of the exercise was to drape himself with the Union Jack by consciously echoing Chamberlain's declaration of war and in doing so chalk up a few brownie points with the Euro-Sceptic wing of the Tory Party.

By the time it's possible to measure whether Major's bluster has got us anywhere or not, it's likely that the general election will have come and gone. So the bluster can be reckoned as essentially a piece of short-term political posturing by a shallow and grubby little politician.

The proper thing to do in the situation in which Britain now finds herself would be to quit the EU altogether. Our Euro partners would not like this but the Euro club has never benefitted Britain, and at least that way Britain would emerge with some dignity and respect.

NOT long ago, national science week came and went with not a word from the government as to how Britain's lamentable record in development and funding is to be improved. Tory penny-pinching attitudes in an area like science is surely cutting off the country's nose to spite its face.

Scientific research and development is the foundation of a modern economy and the guarantor of the material prosperity of everyone in the country. If new inventions were not made, new applications not found and new development not undertaken there would never have been companies to provide employment with high wages to make motor cars with all the improvements made since the turn of the century as well as in a whole host of other industries. It is all just taken for granted.

Figures produced showed that while British scientific endeavour is still among the best in the world, when it comes to product development to provide employment and increase trade, this country lags well behind. Sadly, the status of scientists and engineers in this country is miserably low -- unlike in Germany and Japan which rewards its cutting edge workers properly.

Scientists believe that career prospects are at an all-time low. Salaries are low, contracts temporary and social status pitiful, as is that of engineers and technicians. As a result, Britain's brightest young scientific minds are looking elsewhere for a decent reward.

It shouldn't be like this and under a BNP government, it wouldn't be. Despite the mediocre level that Britain has sunk to under postwar Labour and Tory governments, Britons are still capable of surmounting the stifling government-created atmosphere of failure and defeat. British can still be best! Britain can lead the world!

Two examples will suffice. One is Dr. Colin Whitworth, who has invented a revolutionary new treatment for skin cancer which avoids ulceration, scars, infection, radiation treatment and chemotherapy. The treatment uses a light treatment called Photodynamic therapy from a lamp which costs a fraction of that of a laser and with a success rate of 95 per cent. It's small, light and portable and has excellent prospects for production and profit. Manufacturing is to commence at the end of the year, but the identity of the company is not known.

BRITISH SCIENTIST INVENTS NEW ROCKET MOTOR

Another inventor, David Fearn, a senior scientist at the Defence Research Agency (DRA), has developed a totally revolutionary type of rocket motor that could have come straight out of Star Wars or Star Trek. Unlike a conventional chemical rocket motor which burns chemical fuel to give maximum speeds of 25,000 miles per hour and which is also limited by its fuel payload, his new Ion Thruster strips electrons from gas atoms using electric power, micro waves or radio waves and discharges the ion stream out of the rocket exhaust just as a conventional rocket does. The new rocket will achieve speeds of 100,000 miles per hour or with a nuclear reactor generating massive electric power (and fuel payload not being a factor) the thruster could, using constant acceleration, achieve near light speeds. This is the essential ingredient for any amount of realistic space travel, particularly if neighbouring galaxies are to journeyed to. And it's British!

REWARD

Bio-technology is set to be one of the growth industries of the next decade and it is all about analysing DNA, including that of humans. The medical implications of finding specific genes which act on the human body are enormous -- and so are the rewards.

British Biotech is a company that hasn't made a single product. But its announcement that it had successfully completed phase 2 testing of a new generation anti-cancer drug has seen its company valuation rocket to just under £2 billion. This is excellent news for Britain.

GOVERNMENT COWARDICE MAKES BRITAIN THE LOSER

Government timidity ensures that hundreds of British inventions per year never see the light of day and mean that potentially entire product lines and even industries are lost to the UK which would bring increased prosperity and employment.

Trevor Baylis is a case in point. He invented the clockwork radio, had no money to develop the idea and had to gamble that by showing his invention on TV that someone would step forward and back it. If no-one had, others would have been free to develop the invention, particularly abroad. The gamble paid off and funding was secured. Baylis is now working on a clockwork torch and 'Mayday' radio transmitter.

The Government's lack of vision precludes it from setting up special centres for the encouragement of inventors which could provide an objective look at any invention to give advice and see if it had

Doctor demonstrates the lamp on patient

What is necessary is to bring on all the other firms with outstanding ideas so that they too taste success and in so doing, increase the prosperity of everyone in the country. The success stories detailed on this page show what can be done in the face of a total lack of Government support. Imagine what the future holds with a Government totally committed to the support of science!

The British National Party

Britain today is facing political, economic and social collapse: it is a country where white people seem to have no future, betrayed by the old politicians and political parties who serve nothing greater than self-interest and powerful minority pressure groups.

Every day we have to live with the effects of their betrayal: we can see the many areas of Britain that have been colonised by non-whites; we have to put up with crime and violence that blights our society; our youth seem to have no hope in the future; our education system is failing; we have to suffer from the constant threat of unemployment and live with the consequences of the anarchy and chaos that prevails throughout our once-great nation.

And what are our so-called political leaders doing to deal with these problems that are causing misery for millions of Britons?

Nothing, except more lies, more treachery, and more cheap talk. The old political parties and politicians are unwilling and unable to find a new way forward for Britain and her people. They have utterly failed.

But in the midst of all this gloom has emerged something which does give hope for Britain: The British National Party, a party which offers the opportunity of a new dawn for our nation and people.

The British National party stands above the lies, the treachery and the self-interest of the old political institutions. We offer our people a new vision for Britain: a Greater Britain, united, strong, and proud; a country where white children will have a future in a land they can call theirs beyond the imagination of the politicians of today. The British National Party has the policies; it has the leadership; it has the determination and the courage to succeed.

This is our pledge to our fellow Britons. This is the vision that -- despite the decadence at present in our land -- inspires British National Party members to fight on until our victory and Britain's renaissance is complete.

The men and women of the British National party have raised the standard of British resistance. It is a standard that represents the heritage, traditions and culture of a proud people. Every day, more and more people join our ranks -- and eventually one day the British National Party will return Britain to the British.

If you think that you have what it takes to become part of our great movement then we want you to join us.

The British National party is the last line of defence for our people, our nation, and our way of life. It is the last hope for a future for white children in Britain.

Do what you know to be right, and join with us as we march toward a new dawn for our land and people.

Future generations will honour those who did their duty in the struggle for Britain today. Join us!

SCHOOLS IN TROUBLE

Decades of liberal education policies, incompetent and left wing teachers and increasing immigration have left many of Britain's schools in a mess. Truancy, poor achievement, indiscipline, drug taking, rape and violent assault on staff and pupils are the legacy of the failure of both Tory and Labour governments. This month, BN takes a look at the state of Britain's schools.

VIOLENCE

So bad is the situation that the National Association of Schoolmasters Union of Women Teachers (NASUWT) is calling for police or security guards to be stationed at flashpoint schools, the installation of closed-circuit cameras and personal panic alarms for teachers.

The most violent case to grab the headlines this year was the death of a west London headmaster. Then, to distract attention away from the racial overtones of the case, hysteria was whipped up over the possession of knives. The NASUWT made its call after Hazel Spence-Young received £82,500 from Coventry city council for spinal injuries inflicted at Frederick Bird primary school in 1989 by a 10-year-old boy who was so violent that an educational psychologist said he should be in a special school. He punched and kicked her as she tried to persuade him to go back into the classroom.

Now unable to work, she needs constant painkillers, including morphine, and her right arm is partly paralysed.

● Louise Allen aged thirteen was killed by two girls from a nearby school after trying to protect her friend from a beating from the girls aged twelve and thirteen. Louise was kicked to death.

EXPULSIONS

More pupils are being expelled from school than ever before -- up from 2,910 in 1991 to 11,181 in 1994. The dramatic rise is due to two factors. Firstly, schools no longer have the sanction of physical punishment because it's 'cruel and barbaric'. The result of that is the increased use of expulsions meaning a badly botched schooling for a pupil leading to long-term failure in later life. Much more enlightened! Secondly, the long-term breakdown in society is making its impact in earlier life at school. Lack of discipline at home and in the school, lack of moral authority from institutionalised structures -- the government, the courts, the church etc., the promotion of alien culture, drug and gang culture all play a part. Put simply it's 'cool' to be bad.

Children as young as three are also being expelled. Three- and four-year-olds get to school and kick and punch other pupils and staff if they cannot get their own way. A complete lack of parental discipline is to blame.

Several expulsion rows have broken in the press over different pupils, with teachers threatening to strike if pupils are not expelled for the safety of the staff and other pupils. One headline referred to angelic-faced twelve-year-old Graham Cram. 'Is he really to be feared?' it said. Of course, on his best behaviour, the seemingly innocent youngster looks as if butter wouldn't melt in his mouth. Of course he isn't to be feared you're expected to think. Surely it's a misunderstanding; give him a bit of attention, treat him as you would want to be treated etc. and surely all will be well. In an ideal world possibly. But the fact is that some youngsters behave abominably and they do so because there is no sanction -- particularly corporal punishment against it. Graham behaves like a little monster because he knows he can get away with it. It would be a different matter after six of the best!

North London is a perfect example of the way British schools will go. At an Islington school, pupils as young as 13 and 14 have been expelled for bringing in guns and knives. Other children at the same school were excluded for smoking drugs in front of teachers. The same school has the worst GCSE exam results in Britain.

At the same time recent reports show that Black pupils, particularly boys, are ten times more likely to be expelled from nearby Camden schools than their white classmates. It was also revealed that black British boys are five times more likely to be expelled than any other ethnic group. Although black pupils make up just 13.5 per cent of Camden school children, it is estimated that some 17 out of 51 pupils expelled last year were black (33 per cent).

Despite the talk of politicians, parents up and down the country know what is going on. They talk to each other and they get to hear what's happening. Many more parents, like Labour front bench Harriet Harman, can be expected to follow Labour leader Tony Blair's example in 'opting out' of problem schools -- which usually means multi-racial schools, in favour of safe (and white) schools.

Innocent-looking Graham Cram: Cane the little blighter!

RED TEACHERS

The left wing National Union of Teachers which has 190,000 members is controlled by communists. Seven years after the Berlin wall came down and the Soviet Union collapsed, the reds still strive to bring the communist 'dream' to Britain through our most vulnerable people -- our children. Children are being taught that it's ok to be homosexual, to marry non-whites and that 'racism' is bad. What they are not being taught is how to survive in a modern competitive world. Basics like English and Maths are poorly taught and subjects like Geography and History are scarcely taught at all. In both geography and history not enough is taught about Britain and the British impact on the modern world. The aim is a sly and wicked one. It is to divorce British youngsters from their historical, cultural and racial roots. It is to rob them of a sense of knowing who they are.

The NUT is effectively run by leftists in the Campaign for a Democratic Fighting Union (CDFU) and the Socialist Teacher's Alliance (STA).

Elections to NUT offices are held at meetings where everyone is bored to death and so don't attend -- leaving the way clear for the committed reds. Local meetings that used to regularly attract 100 now attract single figures. At their Cardiff conference back in April, the communist CDFU and STA used its power of organisation to deny a leadership resolution to hand power back to their members, defeating it by 102,278 votes to 74,044 and thus retaining the block vote system. Leading left winger, Reese said: "We'll never allow conference decisions to be subject to a ballot of the members. That's not what we mean by democracy." Quite!

LOW STANDARDS

Ofsted, the Office for standards in education did the whole nation a service when it published and confirmed the fact that trendy new teaching methods do not work and that for reading, the best method of teaching is the old fashioned phonic method: M-a-t spells mat. Intensive systematic teaching of phonics is the best way it said. Even where teachers were teaching the method -- often covertly in defiance of official school policies, they got it wrong by breaking down 'ch' with the distinctive sound heard in 'church' into 'c' and 'h' which merely confused the children being taught.

Ofsted found that half of schools fail to meet national curriculum standards, two-thirds of schools had inadequate guidelines for its teachers, 80 per cent of pupils in 45 inner-London schools couldn't read properly at seven and at eleven, 40 per cent had a reading age of two years behind their age making them incapable of learning the national curriculum and effectively making them drop outs with no future!

The ideological fervour that has seen teachers drop phonics has betrayed the nation and as David Blunket, Labour's education spokesman admitted, betrayed whole generations of children. Instead, teachers have used 'book learning' which means children are expected to simply pick up a book, guess what the words are and read! It is the failure to adequately teach reading above all else that is having such catastrophic consequences for educational standards. Because if that basic isn't mastered, then a pupil cannot go on to read and learn about anything else. Obviously! Yet the trendy lefties in the teaching profession apparently can't grasp this simple fact. The reason teaching standards are so low is that not enough poor teachers are weeded out at the very start.

In a separate Anglo-Australian study it has been revealed that a fifth of children at primary school think the world is flat. Other basic knowledge is nonexistent and only a tiny minority could locate Australia on a map -- the land of our racial kinfolk. This disgraceful state of affairs has occurred because the national curriculum demands only that, by the age of seven, schoolchildren should 'become aware that the world extends beyond the UK'. Australian schoolchildren on the other hand know full well that the earth is spherical and can locate the UK on a globe almost as easily as they could their own country.

Another cause of falling standards is disruptive pupils in class. Years ago, such a child would have got a clip round the ear or sent to the head for either the slipper or the cane. Now, such sanction is not available and teachers have to simply get on with the job under increasingly difficult conditions.

TORIES STEAL BNP POLICY

In the face of falling standards in the nation's schools, incompetent teachers have been told that they face the sack in a move designed to get rid of 15,000 useless teachers. The Office for Standards in Education Inspectors will identify incompetent staff and report them to the head teacher. They will then have to improve within nine months or face the sack. BN can only say that it's about time too.

LABOUR CONFESS

David Blunket, Labour's shadow education spokesman has admitted that the comprehensive education policy of the 1960's was a failure and had betrayed whole generations of children. In a refreshing display of honesty among politicians, Mr. Blunket said: "The birth of the comprehensive school was about bringing out the best in each and every one of our children. It was not about enforcing drab uniformity in the name of fairness." Which of course, was precisely what happened.

NO CASH

It will surprise no-one who knows this Tory government, that the UK spends less of its national wealth on education than any other European nation. As a result, the UK has the second biggest class sizes in Europe, the lowest provision for nursery education, the lowest proportion of teenagers reaching advanced standard in sixth form and the smallest proportion going on to read technical subjects such as engineering at university. Foreign language learning is second last only to Ireland.

TORIES TROUNCED! MORE TORY, LABOUR SHAME

As most readers will now be aware, the Tories took another electoral bashing at the hands of the voters last month. The Tories started last month in third place behind Labour and the Lib-Dems in terms of council seats held and of the 1,090 seats the Tories were defending, they lost over half -- 573. Thirty councils returned no Tory councillors at all and the Tories have control of just three non-metropolitan councils in the country marking their second worst performance in local election history.

● In Birch Green, West Lancs, the Tories (208 votes) came off second best to the Natural Law Party (268 votes), the crank outfit which advocates yogic flying -- meditating while hovering above the floor in the lotus position and making strange "Omm" noises.

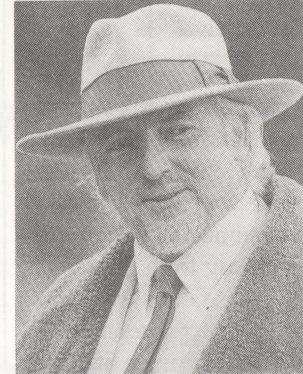

NLP rug-hopper bests the Tories in Birch Green, W. Lancs.

Owen Oyston, the socialist millionaire has been gaoled for six years for raping a 16-year-old model. Oyston used his wealth and prestige to lure young girls to his home, where he raped them almost under the nose of his wife, Vicki. Sent down, Oyston has been ignored by his old pals in the Labour party which he generously funded for years.

Dame Shirley Porter, the ex-leader of Tory Westminster council, along with five of her Tory cronies has been found guilty of 'wilful misconduct' by John Magill the district auditor and has been ordered to pay back £31.6 million lost in the selective sale of homes to likely Tory voters. Porter's gerrymandering meant that homes were kept empty until they could be sold to perceived Tory voters. Meanwhile the rents that could have been had went begging and a double expense was incurred keeping people (perceived Labour voters) in poor accommodation in hostels and in flats which she and the council knew had severe asbestos contamination. Her political ambitions deprived families of homes, robbed the taxpayer of £32 million and put the lives of whole families at risk -- in all probability condemning dozens of people to an early death by asbestosis. No words are sufficient to describe her evil. What makes her evil even more shocking is that leading Tories have rallied to her support and the Prime Minister himself has failed to make any condemnation at all. The corruption and evil within that party knows no bounds.

OWEN OYSTON: Rapist Bankrolled Labour

TORIES TRAP BLACKS

Miss Hennieta Royle, Tory Party prospective candidate for Tottenham, has attacked the wishes and aspirations of Black people in Britain who want to go home. Bernie Grant, the controversial Black MP who proposed to Home Secretary Michael Howard that proper financial backing be given to fund a programme of repatriation, is to have Royle fighting for his constituency.

Michael Howard gave Black people a slap in the face when he refused to increase the funds that are already available, although pathetically inadequate. Royle has joined the attack and said: "Repatriation is a red herring and an admission of defeat. Let us make things better for people here in their own country and our own locality." Miss Royle, who is not expected to receive many Black votes wants Black people to stay here when they have clearly expressed a preference to go home. Trapped in a White country with white values, customs, culture and expectations, many Blacks wish to return to their homeland. Royle, along with all the other champions of multi-racialism seems only intent on perpetuating the misery.

A spokesman for the Black MP said: "A lot of Bernie's own constituents have come to us to say they want to go home. If Miss Royle took the trouble to get to know the people of Tottenham she would know full well that what Bernie is asking for is a fair reflection of what people feel."

Most race relations 'experts' and politicians oppose repatriation in any form not least because if many non-whites were to go home, they would themselves be out of a job!

To Grant's credit, he is representing the wishes of Black people even if Tories will not. Mr. Grant has said that the fight for repatriation will go on. BN says give 'em the money Michael!

MORE TORY WOE

To add to the government's woes, two MPs are threatening the Government's fragile majority and the loss of financial donors continues.

Sir George Gardiner MP has threatened to resign his Reigate constituency seat rather than carry on as a lame duck MP if his constituency party fails to reselect him. The resultant by-election would probably mean another loss for the Tories even with his current 17,000 majority.

In a separate move, George Walden MP has threatened to resign the Tory whip effectively making himself an Independent. His disgruntlement comes over the Government's handling of the beef crisis and its waging of "little plastic Union Jacks."

According to Labour Research, the Tories have lost more than 100 corporate donors since the last election. In the year 1994/1995 at least 37 firms which gave £400,000 to the Conservatives have stopped funding the Tories joining a very long list of disenchanted companies which together gave over a million pounds before the last election.

As Major's sorry show goes on, two things are clear: Firstly, the Tories have cleared their £12 million overdraft and built up a war chest of £26 million in the face of declining membership rolls and a loss of corporate support. Claims of 'dodgy' financing from abroad abound; second, Major has no firm course, continually buffeted by the prevailing wind. At one moment pro-Europe, the next decidedly 'Euro-Sceptic,' a hostage to the breeze. It is a sorry spectacle.

TO THE POINT

Or, We Couldn't Have Put It Better Ourselves - A selection of articles and letters in the establishment press showing opinion moving our way.

For an illustration of just how fast the argument on Europe is moving we couldn't do better than Monday's outburst by the CBI director-general Adair Turner that anyone who thinks Britain should leave the EU is living in 'cloud-cuckoo-land'.

Until the past week or two, Europhiles like Mr Turner -- or John Major, whose speech last week he was dutifully echoing -- would not have thought it remotely necessary to make such a point. The possibility that Britain might actually leave the EU was simply not on the agenda.

But in recent weeks millions of people have finally become so enraged by the craziness of this new system of government we are living under that for the first time they are seriously having to think the unthinkable -- that we should get out of it altogether.

Up to now, for all the irritations Europe has inflicted on us, the pro-European establishment has always occupied the high ground by being able to maintain that, on balance, belonging to club Europe has brought us such enormous advantages that such fleabites as losing our fishing industry could be brushed aside.

But suddenly a whole range of issues has brought us into a state of unprecedented confrontation with the EU -- the threat to our beef and dairy industries, the hijacking of our fish, the crackpot judgments passed down by the European Court, even the demand that we must be frogmarched back into that same ERM which inflicted on this country the worst economic disaster in the past 20 years.

What this current crisis is doing is at last forcing us to take a completely new perspective and a hard look at just what all those arguments for Britain's membership really amount to. The truth is that when one examines the case for Europe with an objective eye, the whole creaking apparatus begins to look like an extraordinary mirage.

Let us start with a few basic facts which our pro-Europe establishment does everything it can to hide. One of the great arguments when Edward Heath led a declining Britain into Europe in 1973 was that joining the biggest market in the world was going to do wonders for our trade. We saw those continental economies booming, and the theory was that Britain would share in the prosperity.

But the truth is that it is our continental competitors who have done incomparably better out of the deal. In 23 years they have sold £100 billion more of goods to Britain than we have sold to them -- yet before we joined we were actually trading with them at a surplus.

Then consider all the additional fees we have had to pay for the privilege of joining this club -- the £100 billion we have contributed to the Brussels budget up to £1,000 a year added to the average family's food bill to subsidise Europe's farmers, the huge hidden cost of having to comply with those 20,000 often unnecessary directives and regulations. The collapse of the ERM experiment cost this country nearly £70 billion.

Last year 56 per cent of all Britain's trade was with countries outside the EU and astonishingly, we ran up a trading surplus with every continent in the world but Europe. The reason for this is that economies on every other continent, from America to the Far East, are booming while poor little Europe, suffocated by high interest rates and overregulation, sinks into decline with unemployment up since 1973 from 2.5 pc to 12 pc.

But the greatest illusion of all when we threw in our lot with the Common Market was that we were invited to believe that Europe was somehow the wider world, the big horizon, the future. In fact, as we can now see, we were turning our backs on the wider world, confining ourselves in a stagnant backyard, constrained by the theories of yesterday while the real world charged ahead.

Nothing better illustrates how our Euro-establishment gets everything upside down than the experience of Norway, the country which twice voted in referendums to stay out of the EU.

In 1994 the Norwegian people were sternly warned by their own Euro-establishment -- politicians and big business -- that if they did not vote to join the EU, they faced economic disaster.

In fact, in the past two years their economy has grown faster than any in Europe, and the number of Norwegians opposed to joining the EU has soared from 52 pc at the time of the vote to 65 Pc.

In all sorts of ways it is now deeply relevant for Britain to meditate on the Norwegian example. When our Euro-establishment issues similar dire warnings about the disasters which would follow our leaving the EU, we should remember exactly the same threats were held over the heads of the Norwegians, and turned out to be wholly baseless.

Despite not being in, Norway enjoys a much higher share of its trade with the EU than Britain does, in fact its only problem recently has been that its two main trading partners, Germany and Sweden, have been unable to buy so much from Norway because their economies both share in the EU decline.

As for the threat that, if Britain left the EU, our competitors might exclude us from their Single Market, nothing more obviously gives the lie to this than that they gain so much more from trading with us than we do from them. To exclude our goods would simply be to cut off their own noses.

We must realise there is a wider world outside. We must leap back into the fresh air -- and I am confident that we will be amazed at how we can walk tall again.

As one of the world's great trading nations, we shall thrive. Above all we shall feel an extraordinary sense of liberation as we escape one of the most bizarre political and bureaucratic experiments ever conceived by the mind of men.

Many thanks for your letters in response to my St George's Day contribution. I'm just sorry I can't reply to you all personally.

While the persecution of the English continues apace, we are expected to bend over backwards to accommodate other cultures.

Town planners are being told by their professional body that normal planning controls should not apply to ethnic minorities. The 'racially disadvantaged' should be allowed to build what they like, where they like. [what's new? Ed.] Moslems should be free to construct mosques wherever they choose, even if the minarets and domes clash with the character of the area.

And applications for takeaway curry and kebab shops should always be granted, regardless of objections on the grounds of smell, noise and litter. This is because 'for a large number of ethnic minorities hot-food takeaways are important job providers.' So are slaughterhouses, brothels, all-night discos, glue factories and drug dens, come to that. But who wants to live next door to one?

It makes you wonder exactly who is 'racially disadvantaged' in Britain today.

KONDEMNATION KORNER

Anger over BNP's new campaign

FALKIRK HAS been bombarded with British National Party leaflets containing graphic racial smears. It is the second time the BNP has brought its message of hate to the town.

Two years ago the area was picked as a major target for recruitment as BNP fanatics tried to canvass support at Brockville Stadium, home of Falkirk FC. Now, leaflets -- with the BNP's red, white and blue flag emblem -- have been left on car windscreens in the Brightons area.

One was stuck overnight on the car of Councillor David Speirs and his wife. Mr Speirs alerted police.

He said, "This has got to be stopped. It is disgusting and out of order. My wife was very upset when she found the leaflet as she went to our car in the morning."

A police spokesman confirmed they were investigating and added, "This is something we are very concerned about and we are looking into it."

Councillor Tam O'Dea, convener of Falkirk's equal opportunities committee, said, "I'm outraged at this incitement to racial prejudice -- especially coming just months after the local campaign won a European award."

Depute Provost Jeanette Burness has informed Central Scotland Police's racial harassment unit.

She said, "This is not nice for the ethnic minority groups, who work really hard and give total support to Falkirk district. This cannot be allowed to happen here."

BATTLE FOR FREE SPEECH, LIBERTY AND FREEDOM

The growing trend towards the erosion of free speech, liberty and freedom took another step when Michael Howard, Britain's weakling Home Secretary caved in to outrageous demands from Europe to ban free speech & enquiry and thus criticism on topics that portray the Government (and foreign governments) in a poor light.

The so-called EU declaration against racism and xenophobia is a mask to outlaw any critical comment on the subject of race at all -- which all governments have made a ghastly mess of by foisting multi-racial societies onto every European country without ever asking the permission of its own people. One item even makes it an offence to deny the 'reality' of the holocaust, thus stifling academic debate and, for the present only, is not to be included in Britain.

Repression of this kind will, over time reveal who are the real friends of freedom -- step forward John Alderson, Chief Constable of Devon and Cornwall from 1973-1982. The former Chief Constable has accused cowardly Howard of using the language of dictators: "Give me your liberties and I will protect you." He describes the new role of MI5 in combatting crime as "one of the most worrying developments of modern times. It is fatal to let the security service into the area of ordinary crime," he said because of its unaccountability.

"They infiltrate organisations, people's jobs and lives. They operate almost like a cancer, infiltrating and destroying trust and security between people... At the moment the acorn of a Stasi [former East German secret police] has been planted... there for future governments to build on... where half the population finishes up spying on the other half."

Weighing in alongside him was Sir Richard Scott, the author of the arms-to-Iraq report (The Scott report). Sir Richard declared that failure of Parliament to act to end WWII emergency power legislation to control exports "gave substance to the charge that the constitution has become an elective dictatorship" -- something the BNP has maintained for some while. Sir Richard said Whitehall lawyers admitted claims that WWII emergency legislation continued until the final four power settlement in Germany in 1990 was a "convenient fiction." "What business

attacked the government has a democratic Government in a country subject to the rule of law, to use 'convenient fiction' in order to continue its use of emergency powers?" asked Sir Richard.

It isn't all bad news though. Two Bristol MPs are battling with WH Smith over its decision to drop far-left magazine, Tribune. Ms. Corston (Bristol East) and Mr. Berry (Kingswood), claim the decision is a form of censorship and could hamper people's right to free speech. WH Smith dropped the title when it sold just 40 copies in 25 stores. BN will be contacting the two Bristol MPs to see if they can lend their weight to help persuade WH Smith to include British Nationalist and Spearhead on its distribution list. Needless to say, no-one should hold their breath on it.

Not long ago, two authors in the space of a month had books ready to be published dropped by their publishers who in each case had caved in to pressure from intolerant bigots trying to suppress free speech and the freedom of dissemination of information.

In America, Britain's own David Irving, the historian noted for his original research, had his American publisher, St. Martin's Press withdraw his biography of Dr. Joseph Goebbels, Goebbels, Mastermind of the Third Reich, from publication. Professor Cameron Watt of the London School of Economics said of the withdrawal: "What is happening in America is not good."

The intolerant bigots who lobbied for this book ban were American Jews, who seem to think that their 'suffering' gives them rights of censorship.

Here in Britain, John Wiley & Sons have withdrawn a book by Christopher Brand, a psychology lecturer at Edinburgh University, entitled The g Factor. The book looks at the social and economic implications of low IQ and a small part of the book touches on the correlation of IQ and race. 'Liberals' and politically correct bigots were behind the pressure for this book ban. The book

The g Factor

General Intelligence and its Implications

Christopher Brand

The g Factor:
New book on IQ

comes a year after the successful and controversial book, The Bell Curve by two leading Jewish academics which came to the same conclusions. Mr. Brand is to sue for breach of contract. Significantly, not a single critic disputed the book's central claim that scientific research has consistently shown a 15-point IQ gap between black and white students in America. Mr. Brand said he was astonished at the "mock hysteria" of the media and his publishers. He added that the narrowing of the socio-economic differences between the races, better nutrition and health care and more integration had made not a "jot or a tittle of difference" to the IQ gap and "You won't find any psychologist of any repute who has said anything different since the turn of the century."

Senior psychologists have criticised the publishers book-banning. One, Walter Furneaux, professor of psychology at Brunel University said: "This represents my worst fears. An attempt to stifle all intellectual freedom."

The efforts of 'liberals' and Jews to stifle freedom and debate on whatever spurious grounds must be resisted. Freedom must prevail over the new book-burners and destroyers, over the intolerance of the haters and the bigots. The British National Party is the only political party in Britain today with a manifesto commitment to freedom of speech. Long live freedom!

BN BRIEFING

REPATRIATION FILE

Hong Kong has sent back 100 boat people back to Vietnam as the first of 600 scheduled to go back in May. The burning down of their own detention centre on Hong Kong will not stop the deportations. All 17,000 'refugees' are to be returned by next year.

ISRAELI 'HEROES' TELL IT TO THE PRESS

Five Israeli soldiers whose artillery battery killed more than a hundred Lebanese fleeing the Israeli bombardment at Cana, southern Lebanon defended their actions in an interview. One said more should have been killed and another said their commander had congratulated them as the dead were "just dirty Arabs."

HINDUS WANT MAD COWS

Hindus in Britain and India have offered to take the UK's beef and dairy herd off the government's hands -- worth in excess of £4 billion before the government's BSE crisis -- for no charge, if the government will pay the multi-million pound shipping bill to India. In India, the cows would roam freely and not be culled as they are held as sacred. Very decent of them don't you think?

QUEER CLERGY

So rife is sodomy within the Church that the World Council of Churches has sought immunity from prosecution for its queer clergy attending its assembly in Zimbabwe. Homosexual acts are an offence in that country and President Mugabe has called homosexuals "Worse than dogs and pigs." Gays attending the conference are concerned that they might get into trouble trying to pick up boys from the street.

ALIEN TAKEOVER -- WRITING ON THE WALL

Labour run Tower Hamlets council in London has confirmed the long term ambitions of its ethnic 'minorities' by putting up street signs in Bengali. Currently, the only street signs in the streets of Spitalfields are in Bengali -- there are no English language street signs at all in what council officials say is a 'mistake'. If Londoners can't find their way round, they will just have to follow their instincts they said. Like vote BNP?

LECOMBER ON RADIO SCOTLAND

Some readers may recall that Tony Lecomber wrote in December's Spearhead an article about the party's use of the Internet. Since that time, the Internet site has expanded and is one of the most professional sites on the Net. The continuing (and largely contrived) controversy surrounding the Internet as a medium for pornography and bomb making manuals provides the party's use of the Internet with an extra source of useful publicity.

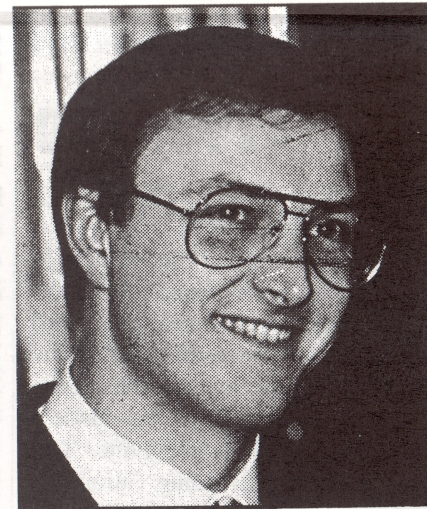

Last month, as a result of just such media interest, Tony Lecomber was interviewed for Radio Scotland's Newsweek program, broadcast on Saturdays, for a ten minute feature on the Internet, of which the party's share was some two minutes.

The programme started by reviewing various crank web-sites in America churning out rabid nonsense and then went on to mention that bomb making instructions are available on the Net -- without disclosing that such instructions are had exclusively from American anarchist sites. The BNP was then mentioned as being moderate in its approach, and as such, of even greater cause for concern! Which just goes to show that the liberal media definitely believe in having their cake and eating it.

Some 50,000 people would then have heard Tony state the party's position on immigration and repatriation and how it would be of benefit to both the British people and the immigrants themselves for immigrants here to be repatriated with resettlement grants. Another telling point was made when asked about bomb manuals on the Net. The reply was "If you want to talk about terrorism, you should ask the Tory party who are very keen to sit down at the table with the IRA." -- which went down quite well. The party emerged out of this interview very well indeed and is a sign of the future.

SEX OFFENDERS GET CAUTIONS!

Almost half of all the serious offenders in Bedfordshire are punished with nothing more than a caution. That is the amazing story to emerge from Bedfordshire police statistics.

In one sickening case, a man who had incest with a girl under 13 was let off with a warning from police. Another got a caution for rape! Don't forget, all these cautions go towards the notorious police 'clear up' figures! Other cautions were given for two men for gross indecency with boys; eleven men for indecent assault on females under the age of 16; four men for indecent assault on a male under the age of 16 and one man for having unlawful sexual intercourse with a mentally defective woman.

The figures show that 46 per cent -- 2,023 -- of serious or indictable offences in Bedfordshire escaped unpunished last year, including 290 acts of violence, 12 robberies and 1,290 theft and handling offences.

Is it any wonder that most people regard law and order in this country as a joke. For all the bluster of the Tory party, little has changed. Crime has soared despite frantic Tory figure fiddling and the detection rate has remained steady. In other words, more criminals are getting away with it! Try as he might, no amount of bluster from Home Secretary Michael Howard can conceal the huge rise of crime under the Tories -- the so-called and self-styled party of 'law and order'.

Sir,
There must be millions of people like me, sick and tired of the rabid multi-racialism of our television programmes -- BBC or commercial -- and all the advertising agencies. It is practically impossible to find a programme or see an advertisement that doesn't include the mandatory member of the 'minorities,' no matter how irrelevant or even ludicrous. Innumerable times we have a close-up of some such character, happily smiling -- as who wouldn't on being grossly overpaid just to stand there and be filmed. All in a good cause, of course, serving to teach us white folks that our land is steadily being handed over to others.

How pleasant it is therefore to see the new Vauxhall tele-ad, purporting to report on a toddlers' convention enthusing about one of the new models. Not a word of dialogue -- just baby burbling and cooing -- which makes a welcome change from the usual mindless advertising drivel. And -- wonder of wonders -- there isn't a black, brown or yellow baby in sight. Brilliant!

But I wonder how long it will be before the surly wretches of the CRE launch their usual screech of 'racism,' and how long before the bright little white chairbaby of the conference is replaced by the coloured offspring of some commonwealth cousin?

Meanwhile, may I recommend Vauxhall cars and their advertising agency for this year's 'BNP Tele-Oscar'?

R. Barden,
Dewsbury.

Sir,
Please find enclosed £20 for my membership of the BNP. On reading the party manifesto, I realised these were my thoughts expressed in print -- commitment to the brave people of the Falklands, a national identity, encouraged in so many other countries, yet suppressed in our own. I was pleased to see recognition of our debt to those who served us so well in previous conflicts, who must feel so unappreciated when they see the generous pensions enjoyed by their former enemies.

On defence, as a former member of the Territorial Army, I find myself in complete agreement -- military preparedness is vital. The recent events of Dunblane and Tasmania fuel the arguments of those who would like to see firearms banned. The quiet example of Switzerland -- guns in every home and low crime is often forgotten.

Finally, I want to say that I stand ready to help in any way I can.

Mark Sohn
Sussex.

Sir,
As a subscriber to BN and a member of the party for nearly two years now, I have to say I have found it most informative and enjoyable to read.

However, I should like to make a criticism on the subject of anagrams. These are an acquired taste and frankly, as I'm sure you'll agree, most of them are awful anyway. Although the one on Virginia Bottomley is the exception which proves the rule!

Jason Smith,
London.

Sir,
I am an English citizen of 48 years with four children with a reasonable job and a good standard of living. I am concerned about the future identity of this country when I see my own surrounding area absolutely over run with Asians who are breeding at a rate far in excess of our own.

Attacks on white people are prevalent in the area and quite recently five white pupils from a local school in Royston have been injured after being set upon by a large gang of Asians. Quite clearly something needs to be done before things get worse. The politicians are either blind or ignoring the issue.

If I may say, the BNP needs to attract people of the true British population to its cause by approaching a wider range of issues other than race. Other areas of concern need to be addressed which will attract voters on other issues.

Concerned mother,

Why Britain detests the Tories

Former Conservative Party Treasurer Lord Mollathorne recently said that it would be a good thing if the Tories had the most general election. This is a symptom of the way in which the Tories are seen by the British people. The following leaflet explains why.

- The Conservatives of Britain are responsible for the present state of the country.
- The Tories have destroyed the British economy and have caused unemployment to rise.
- The Tories have destroyed the British education system and have caused the standard of living to fall.
- The Tories have destroyed the British health service and have caused the standard of living to fall.
- The Tories have destroyed the British environment and have caused the standard of living to fall.
- The Tories have destroyed the British social structure and have caused the standard of living to fall.
- The Tories have destroyed the British way of life and have caused the standard of living to fall.
- The Tories have destroyed the British future and have caused the standard of living to fall.

HANG CHILD MURDERERS!

The vast majority of people agree that the death penalty should be reintroduced for child killers. Yet neither Conservatives, Labour nor Liberal Democrats are prepared to back such a measure into law. Parliament is supposed to represent the people. But the do-gooders who sit in Government are more concerned with the rights of murderers than with the safety of our children. Sick child killers are kept in prison, often in relative luxury and at vast expense, until such time as they are released to kill again. Others such as Ian Brady and Myra Hindley are a constant reminder to the tragic parents of their victims. All those like Brady and Hindley, gave up the right to live the moment they took a young life. With more and more of these cases occurring it is time for the death penalty to be reintroduced. A country which allows the killers of its children to live is morally bankrupt. Only the British National Party is committed to the reintroduction of the death penalty for child killers.

FOREIGN NEWS

FRENCH 'LIVING SAINT' ATTACKED FOR HIS DEFENCE OF FREEDOM

France's 'living saint', Abbé Pierre has been at the centre of a storm for defending the right to free speech in France. Abbé Pierre has defended Roger Garaudy's right of academic freedom in his book, The Founding Myths of Israeli Politics, which merely questions the extent of the so-called 'holocaust'. In defending an academic's right of freedom to publish views which merely question the extent of the holocaust, Abbé Pierre has been vilified in the French media.

During the last war, Abbé Pierre smuggled Jews out of France and cannot be claimed as an anti-Semite. He is a devout Catholic, has campaigned for the poor and helpless throughout the world and is on the committee of the League Against Racism and Anti-Semitism. For his life's sacrifice to the poor, Abbé Pierre is venerated throughout France.

While not defending the holocaust, Abbé Pierre does defend the freedom of academics to discuss history: "To forbid research into the worst crimes in history risks that the younger generation will wonder what certain people have to hide." Abbé Pierre went on to call for a conference of historians and researchers to debate the whole issue and publish its conclusions. It has been claimed that Abbé Pierre has made a number of U-turns over the matter. This is not so. After defending Garaudy's freedom to publish, he reiterated his position that the holocaust was wrong. Defending the right to question the veracity and extent of the holocaust and defending the holocaust itself is not the same thing -- Abbé Pierre has been consistent throughout.

Abbé Pierre, aged 83: Defender of freedom.

FRONT NATIONAL ON THE RISE!

Also in France, the ruling Gaullist-led cabinet is split over immigration policy. Tough proposals to curb immigrant's access to health and education services have been handed over to Alan Juppé, the French President. The right-wing Gaullists are drifting even further towards positions held by the Front National, but deny 'running after the FN.'

The Front National say that street violence stems from unemployment, poverty and the drug trade, all of which are worsened by the presence of immigrants. The message has struck a chord because the Front National are currently enjoying poll ratings of 33 per cent and this is pulling the whole of French politics to the 'right'.

Jean-Marie Le Pen's Front National have not enjoyed such a large poll rating for some time, although of course, turning such a rating into votes in less than two years time in elections will be harder to manage. Le Pen won 20 per cent in local elections last year and so the jump in popularity represents an increase of 65 per cent on Le Pen's previous support.

An added publicity bonus for Le Pen has been Brigitte Bardot's widely publicised comments that she may leave her beloved France and emigrate because there are too many Muslim immigrants in the country. Bardot, a former film star is now best known for her work with an animal protection foundation. She said: "From year to year, we see mosques flourish across France, while our church bells fall silent because of a lack of priests."

INDIAN GENERAL ELECTION

The biggest elections in the world last month saw the Hindu nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party elected as the biggest party in the new Parliament and their leader, A.B. Vajpayee sworn in as Prime Minister. The BJP didn't have a majority in the new Parliament and Vajpayee was given fifteen days to find coalition partners to secure such a majority. This he failed to do and resigned after a fortnight as India's first nationalist Prime Minister.

A wobbly coalition has replaced the BJP including the former ruling Congress Party. While the BJP didn't secure power, the time it spent as the government has won it considerable prestige and Vajpayee will very likely be content to wait for the new coalition to fall apart and new elections take place.

While India may not be a white nation and the BJP not a fellow European nationalist party, the fact that India has elected a nationalist party is of great importance. Every nationalist success enhances nationalist credibility beyond the borders of its home country. It is proof that nationalism is on the march worldwide. That is all to the good.

A.B. Vajpayee: Became nationalist BJP Premier of India for two weeks.

LOCAL CAMPAIGNS ARE GO!

Croydon and Surrey Branch BNP continues to spearhead the party's crop of local campaigns by promoting two local campaigns at the same time! The campaign against the proposed Mosque in Morden will be familiar to readers and the branch has produced, on its own, a new high quality, two-colour, two-sided A4 leaflet 'Morden BNP say Mosque is a planners' madhouse'. Not only is the quality high, but so is the level of content. All the arguments against the Mosque are well summed up. This really is an excellent leaflet and all branches and groups could do worse than send off for a sample to see now it's done (enclose an SAE).

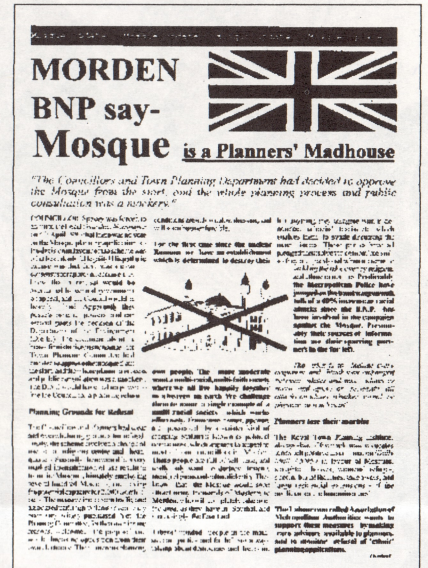

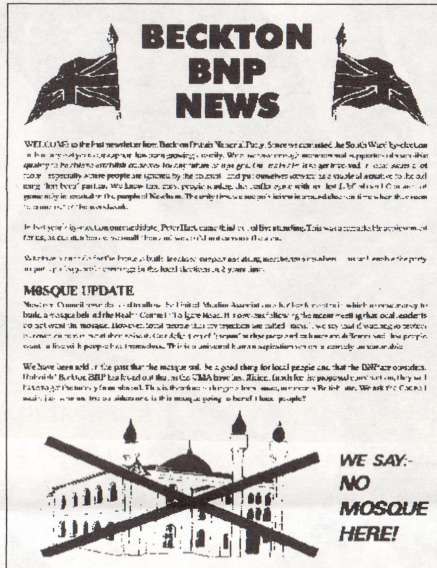

In addition to the Morden Mosque leaflet, Surrey BNP also have an A5 leaflet which again, is two-colour and two-sided alerting people in Croydon to the dangers of immigration from Hong Kong. Once again, the leaflet content is high and is stirring up the British people which is all to the good.

Both campaigns are making use of days of action, pulling people into the area on a regional basis and large numbers of leaflets are going out as a result. The Morden Mosque leaflet in particular is generating great support and has clearly touched a nerve in what used to be a quiet and sleepy London suburb. Activists tell BN that they are both pleased and surprised at the support the campaign is generating with innumerable people coming out of their homes to say "Well done, keep it up!" The party's vote in the local parliamentary seat that is going to be contested will clearly be one to watch.

Elsewhere, in Beckton the campaign against the Mosque there has continued with 3,000 'Beckton BNP News' newsletters going out in one regional day of action. Around thirty activists leafleted the entirety of Beckton in a single afternoon and made it clear to local residents that while they have been abandoned by the Labour party, the BNP stands square behind them against the Mosque.

Artists impression of what the big regional day of action teams in Morden and Beckton might have looked like. (Cameras next time chaps!)

ELECTION RESULTS FOR MAY

Last month saw the County Council and District Council elections take place in which the BNP stood in just a handful of areas. The big metropolitan areas didn't vote (where the party is strongest) and in some areas, organisers took the view that they wanted to harbour resources for the coming General Election.

In the event, the party stood in just four areas. The results summary is as follows:-

Steve Batkin achieved the party's highest average vote with 5.6 per cent of the vote from 133 votes in Fenton Green ward, Stoke on Trent; Keith Axon won the highest raw vote, getting 215 votes which worked out to 5 per cent in Kingstanding ward, Birmingham; Lee Windridge got 142 votes or 2.3 per cent of the vote in Northfield ward, Birmingham and Chris Jackson got 89 votes or 3.2 per cent of the vote in Todmorden, Calderdale.

The party's average vote was just over 4 per cent and is a reasonable result. The areas not contested in May and which could have been would, incidentally, have been among the highest votes obtained which is a pity. Birmingham BNP in particular did very well fighting its two wards, assisted by National Organiser, Richard Edmonds. Each ward consisted of 9,000 homes and were as a consequence, three times the size of the others. The lower than average vote in Northfield, is no doubt partly explained by only having been three-quarters leafleted as a result of the ground that had to be covered in a very short time, even aided by several days of action.

All the campaigns fought were valuable for three reasons: First, the election spurred leaflet distribution; second, each campaign will have helped build the profile of the party in advance of the General Election; and third, the experience gained is of value in itself as a prelude to the forthcoming General Election, both tactically and in terms of the paper work involved. It should be clearly stated, that no branch or party official is too experienced as to not make mistakes. Basic drill as laid down in the elections handbook should be adhered to so as to avoid such mistakes -- as even the best can make them!

New Technology fund closed

After just one month, the new technology fund has raised and exceeded its target figure of £2,000! The excess will be held in reserve for future I.T. needs. Thank you to everyone who put their hands in their pockets. Special thanks are due to one generous contributor in particular. The money raised will go to purchasing:-

(1) A new A3 laser printer that will provide higher output resolution and thus better quality printed matter and which will be of sufficient size for one whole page of British Nationalist to be printed in one go. Expect to notice the difference next issue.

(2) A scanner -- already purchased and performing well -- for British Nationalist that will enable typed articles, line drawings and photographs to be scanned into the computer, thus saving time typesetting and saving printing costs.

(3) Three fax-modems. These devices permit the linking up by telephone of computers situated at different locations, and enable an article or leaflet typeset on a computer in one part of the country to come up on the screen of a computer in another part instantly, thus saving an enormous amount of time. The three modems are needed to equip three people involved jointly in the production both of British Nationalist and Spearhead magazine.

All the above items will greatly enhance the party's ability to function and give it new capabilities particularly needed in the party's coming general election campaign. Once again, thank you everyone concerned!

Take strength from our great British forebears Richard the Lionheart and the Crusaders

Letter campaigns

In Colne, Lancashire, one lady is waging a one-woman campaign in the letters columns of her local papers. BN has seen examples of these letters and can testify that they are well written and have appeared numerous times -- practically every week -- in the regional and local press (The Lancashire Evening Telegraph and the local paper, The Citizen) carrying a nationalist message. So effective has the campaign become that Mrs. Noble even has other readers writing in with their support on a regular basis. Criticisms are made of course, but Mrs. Noble defends her position very well.

Another letter published in Aldershot's The News shows that it is possible to get letters published in local papers by party officials. Paul Henderson, Organiser for Woking got a very good letter in to his local paper (Reproduced right).

Sadly, not every local paper will support democratic free speech and many will not publish anything by the party at all. One notorious example being the Newham Recorder whose editor reviewed all the local election candidates in the 1994 elections except the BNP candidates and had the gall to admit it was censorship!

Even so, there clearly are local papers which will print letters from the party and organisers should explore this avenue of publicity -- not as a substitute for other work but as an addition, particularly with the General Election coming up where there is likely to be a lively debate in the letter columns between the various party agents and candidates.

If a single individual can wage an effective campaign as Mrs. Noble has, then there is no excuse for every group and branch not to at least give it a try.

I AM writing with regard to John Howe's letter (News, February 2) in which he speaks critically of the European Union.

I can fully agree with his sentiments and those of his political party the UK Independence Party -- on the EU. However, his claim that his party is the only one campaigning for full British sovereign independence must be refuted. The British National Party has been advocating this since its inception in 1982.

We further believe that the support for the EU given by this country's established political parties is simply another indication of the political decadence in Westminster, which includes a cynical disregard for the wishes of the British people on important issues such as Europe, as well as the death penalty, immigration and the lack of commitment to defeating the

The "Euro-madness" of so many of our politicians is only one small part of our country's problems. We need to put the British people's interests at the top of the political agenda -- rather than those of the politicians and their business friends.

We will in fact be fielding a candidate in the Aldershot constituency at the next general election (along with more than 50 more throughout Great Britain). Our platform will be broad-based and will include, for instance, our belief that the obsession of many of our politicians with unrestricted "global free-trade" is the root-cause of our country's continual decline. If we can achieve significant support our voice can become louder and we can add constructively to the necessary debate regarding our country's future. — Paul Henderson, Hampshire BNP.

What we stand for

- The establishment of a government of national unity that will put an end to nationally divisive party warfare; the return of leadership and statesmanship to British affairs.
- An end to immigration and a start to repatriation.
- British withdrawal from the European Community: trade with Europe where it suits us but no political ties.
- The disbanding of the multi-racial Commonwealth and its replacement by a new Commonwealth of self-governing white states.
- British ownership and control of British industry and resources.
- Protection of British industry by the selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.
- An end to the financial swindle that causes inflation and slump, and its replacement by a sane and fair financial system that will give the people the purchasing power to buy the goods they produce.
- The subordination of the power of the City to the power of Government, and the harnessing of the City to the needs of British industry.
- The regeneration of British farming, with the object of achieving the maximum self-sufficiency in food; also the restoration of the fishing industry by protection of our traditional fishing grounds.
- A healthy environment for a healthy people -- the protection of our countryside and an end to the architectural disfigurement of our towns and cities.
- Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty.
- A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and the sacking of 'trendy' teachers.
- An alternative defence strategy: withdrawal from NATO; closure of all foreign military and air bases in Britain; British withdrawal from the war in former Yugoslavia, where no British interest is at stake; the bringing home of British forces from Germany; the strengthening of Britain's defences and a position of armed neutrality.
- An end to overseas aid and the allocation of the money saved to the financing of repatriation and greater help for the needy at home.
- The crushing of the IRA, and the termination of the Anglo-Irish agreement and firm support for the loyalist majority in Northern Ireland.
- A return to healthy moral values aimed at strengthening the family and community.
